NFL

All of Dallas probably still remembers where they were the night Tony Romo botched the hold in Seattle, costing the Cowboys three points and what looked to be a near-certain playoff victory over the defending NFC champion Seahawks. That 21-20 loss in January 2007 proved to not only be the final impetus that finally pushed Bill Parcells into coaching retirement, but also led to the hiring of 32 Kicking Ball Coordinators (one for every stadium in the NFL) the next season (that has always seemed to be the informal story).

I started working for the NFL in August 2007 as the Kicking Ball Coordinator in Cincinnati. This role continued until I was asked to operate the Play Clock (40/25 clock) in 2011 and continued through 2015. I was then moved to the Game Clock in 2016.
